

Copyright is owned by the Author of the thesis. Permission is given for a copy to be downloaded by an individual for the purpose of research and private study only. The thesis may not be reproduced elsewhere without the permission of the Author.

Tactical enacting: A grounded theory

A thesis presented in partial fulfilment of the requirements for the degree of

Doctor of Education

at Massey University, Manawatū, New Zealand.

Catherine Ross

2016

Abstract

This research uses classic grounded theory methodology to produce a grounded theory of tactical enacting. Forty two participants were drawn from the population of learning advisors working in a variety of tertiary education organisations in New Zealand. Data consisted of field notes and transcripts from observations, interviews and a group workshop/discussion and were analysed using all procedures that comprise classic grounded theory methodology.

The thesis of this thesis is that learning advisors express a concern for role performance and continually resolve that concern through tactical enacting. In tactical enacting, learning advisors are working tactically towards a variety of ends. These ends include a performance identity and a role critical to organisational agendas. A role critical to organisational agendas is one which makes a significant contribution to student success outcomes and organisational performance. Making a strong contribution to student success and organisational performance helps learning advisors construct the desired professional identity for themselves and establish their role as valuable in the eyes of others and the organisation. Tactical enacting means advisors perform their role tactically in order to meet their own professional standards as well as the needs and expectations of students and the organisation and to help secure their place within tertiary education. However, in tactical enacting, learning advisors constitute themselves as the performing subject, subject to and subjecting themselves to the performativity discourse of the contemporary tertiary education organisation. At the same time, in tactical enacting, learning advisors constitute themselves as the ethical subject in an effort not to be governed by performativity alone and to enable them to meet organisational, student and their own expectations of how they should behave.

This research contributes to knowledge in three main areas. Firstly, to knowledge and practice in relation to professional roles and organisations; specifically, the learning advisor role in the contemporary tertiary education organisation in New Zealand. Secondly, to research; specifically, to the scholarship of learning advising, and, lastly, to research method; specifically, to classic grounded theory methodology, and to an approach that applies a Foucauldian analytical framework to a discussion of an emergent grounded theory.

Acknowledgements

My thanks and appreciation go to my principal supervisor Nick Zepke who has supported and challenged me from the beginning to the end of this research and to my other supervisors, Seth Brown, Linda Leach and Clare Mariskind, who have done so for various stages of it. Collectively, their enabling approach to the supervision process and their care, critique, questioning, and always thoughtful and thought-provoking responses to my writing, has helped me complete the research and writing with the rigour expected of doctoral researchers.

To all the learning advisors who so willingly gave their time to speak and write to me about their experiences. Their interest in and commitment to this project made it possible.

To my family, friends and colleagues who maintained enthusiastic interest in my progress and cheered me along.

To Massey University for awarding me a Doctoral Completion Bursary which allowed me to take leave from my job and work full-time on putting the final touches to the thesis.

Table of contents

Abstract.....	i
Acknowledgements	iii
Table of contents	iv
List of figures	viii
List of tables	viii
Chapter one.....	1
Introduction to the research	1
Introduction	1
Background to the research	1
The learning advisor role	2
The research problem	5
Aim and purpose of the research.....	5
Justification for the research	6
Potential significance of the research	6
The research approach	7
Structure of the thesis	7
Conclusion	9
Chapter two	10
The learning advisor and their workplace: A contextual overview	10
Introduction	10
The contemporary workplace	11
The contemporary workplace: The New Zealand tertiary education system.....	11
The contemporary workplace: The tertiary education environment	14
The learning advisor in the workplace	21
The performativity culture	22
Professional identity	27
An insecure workplace.....	32
Conclusion	34
Chapter three	35
Methodology.....	35

Introduction	35
Philosophical position	35
Positioning critical realism.....	36
Positioning pragmatism	37
Positioning grounded theory	38
Choosing classic grounded theory methodology.....	40
Overview of the classic grounded theory process.....	42
Data collection	42
Open coding.....	42
Selective coding and theoretical sampling	43
Memo writing.....	43
Theoretical coding, sorting and writing up.....	44
Overview of research aim and purpose.....	44
Data sources.....	45
Data collection	47
Methodological limitations.....	51
Ethical considerations in data collection.....	54
Approach to data analysis	56
Data analysis.....	56
Open coding.....	57
Conceptual memos	59
Theoretical sampling and selective coding	60
Conceptual memo	61
Raising the level of conceptualisation.....	63
Conceptual memo	64
Conceptual memo	65
Generating the theoretical framework.....	66
Conceptual memo	67
Conclusion	72
Chapter four.....	73
The grounded theory of tactical enacting.....	73
Introduction	73

Tactical enacting.....	74
Overview	74
Cultivating	76
Building	77
Projecting.....	81
Influencing	87
Promoting.....	88
Persuading	93
Conclusion	99
Chapter five	100
Discussion of the grounded theory	100
Introduction	100
Discourse, governmentality and ethics.....	103
Discourse	103
Governmentality	104
Ethics.....	105
Tactical enacting: The performing subject.....	108
Tactical enacting: The ethical subject	116
Conclusion	126
Chapter six	128
Conclusions.....	128
Introduction	128
Overview of the research findings.....	129
Contribution to knowledge	130
Contribution to practice	131
Recommendation one	134
Recommendation two.....	135
Recommendation three	135
Recommendation four.....	135
Contribution to research	135
Potential area for future research one	137
Potential area for future research two.....	137

Potential area for future research three.....	138
Contribution to research method.....	138
Summary of contribution to practice, research and method	139
Achievement of research aims	140
Evaluation of research findings	141
Limitations	145
Concluding statement	148
References	150
Appendices	190

List of figures

Figure 1. Adapted from the Tertiary Education Commission (TEC) diagram outlining the structure of the TEO network in the New Zealand tertiary education system (TEC, 2014, p. 31). ITPs = institutes of technology and polytechnics; PTEs = private training establishments; TEOs = tertiary education organisations.	12
Figure 2. The theory of tactical enacting.....	71
Figure 3. The theory of tactical enacting.....	74
Figure 4. The sub-process cultivating and its concepts and properties.	76
Figure 5. The sub-process influencing and its concepts and properties.	87

List of tables

Table 1. Data Sources.....	46
----------------------------	----