ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

At the end of what has seemed like an endless project with many ramifications, I am glad to be able to thank those people who helped me. The people who started me off were Don Fitchet, Secretary of the Turakina Caledonian Society, and the staff of the Wanganui Regional Museum, especially former archivist Alistair McClymont. I am grateful to them and also to Gregor McGregor, Chief of the Wanganui Caledonian Society, for allowing me access to the the early minutes of the Wanganui Caledonian Society. Yvonne Wilkie, archivist at Knox College, Dunedin, provided me with a sense of the Presbyterian Church, made me welcome and went to some lengths to answer what must have seemed utterly pointless queries. Thanks must also go to the staff of the Hocken Library, in Dunedin - both in Leith Street and on campus. I am particularly grateful to the staff of the Alexander Turnbull Library, Wellington, especially Manuscripts and Archives, for finding those items that were not in the catalogue and cheerfully providing answers to some very odd questions. Ian Matheson, Palmerston North City Council Archivist, gave me a vivid understanding of region and place. And, very near completion date, the reference staff of the Palmerston North Public Library have been obliging, professional and interested, and frequently answered last-minute desperation enquiries.

There are certain members of my family who must not be forgotten: Elizabeth Green, who exerted a general calming influence; my husband John, who tried to exert a general organizing influence; my father-in-law, R. J. Annabell, who brought a sense of scale to the project; and, most especially, Ginger, who always woke me up early even when I didn't need it.

I consider myself lucky to have been a student in the Massey University History Department and to have absorbed some of the skills that staff impart to students. I must also thank my fellow students - Isabella, Geoff, Robin, and Ruth - for the privilege of being in their company over the past year. May those regular meetings long continue! Most particularly, I must thank my supervisor, Dr Peter Lineham, of Massey University. His distinctive combination of knowledge, tact, enthusiasm, patience and broad vision always encouraged me. I can only echo the high praise that many other masters and doctoral students have already heaped upon him.
